Kratzberg Mountain

There is a notorious witches' stomping ground called Kratzberg Mountain. Here, witches from far and wide gather together and carry out their hellish art, making the weather, and ruining the land and its people.

Only the sacred weather bells of Unser Frau im Wald, St. Hippolyt, and St. Pankraz prevent this sort of thing. The ringing of these weather bells forces witches to stand down, without having accomplished anything. Extremely vexed, they'll shout out: "If it weren't for Unser Frau, St. Pankraz and Pölten, there would be no more grain."
