

South Tyrol – Land of Myths and Legends

Lana's Big Bell

This bell rang out so brightly and with such a fine tone, that it could be heard as far away as Innsbruck. For this reason, a king wanted to buy it for a large sum of money. The farmers wanted nothing to do with the deal, however, because the clock kept bad weather at bay. This angered the haughty king so much that he ordered that the clock be struck with an iron spike, which is still visible today. Since that day, the sound of the bell has been dulled.